Meals Three Hundred Years Ago.

Let us sit down in imagination, at a dinner in England three hundred years ago. Mighty joints of beef, mutton and veal, boiled and roasted, are accompanied by real pies, capons, black chickens, plovers, partridges, two kinds of bread—the delicate march-pane and the coarser cheate; vegetables are almost unknown in England, and form no part of the regular bill of fare. The first in rank are served, and the dishes are then passed down in gradation to the lower tables, the last remains being served for the poor, who every day await this benevolence at the outer gate.

The second course is ushered in like manner, and is still more plentiful and luxurious—roast swans, venison, pheasants, pullets, snipe, teal, pigeons and poultry. The third course is distinguished by the richness of the sweets; jellies in the shape of animals, trees, houses, etc., a "subtlety," or elaborate piece of sugar work, representing, perhaps, a fortress in miniature, "tarts of divers hues and sundry denominations," conserves of English and foreign fruits, ginger bread, marmalade and confits in endless variety. The beverage consists of ale and mead, and many kinds of wine, served in silver tankards and Venetian glasses.

The waiters at the Earl's tables are gentlemen of high birth, even the younger sons of noblemen, who are placed there to learn domestic customs and all the intrinsic arrangements of a large house. Ushers, marshals, cup bearers, are all of rank, and without the perfect insight into domestic manners they thus practically obtained, they would be utterly at the mercy of their numerous dependents, and unable to maintain in the hundred retainers that may hereafter eat and drink and be clothed at his expense, when they themselves become the heads of families.

Profound silence is preserved during dinner, "for it is the greatest part of civility," save when some one rises, and, first uncovering his head, takes a full cup in his hand, and, setting his countenance with a grave aspect, he craves for audience. Silence being once obtained, he begins to breathe out the name, peradventure, of some honorable personage, whose health is drunk to, and he that pledges must likewise drink his cup, kiss his fingers and bow himself, in sign of a reverent acceptance. And thus the first scene is acted. The cup being newly replenished to the breadth of a hair—that is, the pledge—must now begin his part, and thus it goes round through the whole company.

The banquet over, the guests wash their hands in rose water, and, leaving the gentlemen to their wine, as in the present day, the ladies retire to amuse themselves with backgammon, cards, ninipins, bowls and undoubtedly, the scandal of Queen Elizabeth's court. When the gentlemen have contented themselves with wine well spiced, perhaps the whole party go on a hawk or hunting expedition, or engage in a trial of skill at archery, or, if the company be very numerous and of high rank, a bull or a bear may be baited to death for their amusement, the fair ladies enjoying it quite as much as the Spanish beauties of the present day. At seven o'clock supper is served in the great hall, and resembles the dinner on a much smaller scale. After supper the company amuse themselves with dancing, chess, draughts, quill play, (hot huddle,) or tiers, (blindman's buff,) and other games, now numbered only among the sports of young children. At ten the bell summons to the chapel. Prayers are said by the chaplain, and the household separates for the night.

The Whites and the Colored Race.
The Charleston Mercury has the following article on the duty of the Southern farmer and planter towards the colored race:

Although without money, can he not exhibit the kindly will, and give the gentle admonition, and urge the grave admonition, and help to spread abroad, by his walk and conversation, that noble charity, which is the only bond of peace? Can he not countenance the efforts which are being made to keep the pure faith of Christ in the hearts of these people, and to keep out foul error, or that "gospel of hate" which others are striving to spread amongst them? Leave them to themselves, and you may leave them a prey to deception, malignity, and, perhaps, death—death to the soul and body. Leave them to the influence of others, and they may become organized enemies—not a plague to you because a plague to themselves. The future of the South rests, for its peace and prosperity, upon the amicable relations between the two races inhabiting it.—This amity can only be produced by spreading abroad the great principles and faith of the Prince of Peace. The responsibility for the future must rest mainly on the superior race. Power is resistibility; and neither the folly of weakness, nor the devices of wickedness, can justify us in using or not using it, excepting to promote the good of man and the glory of God. We have had no credit—we will have no credit—for anything we may do for the African race. All the good we have done for them has been attributed to avarice or fear. All that we shall do for them in the future we must expect to do without appreciation by those who have assumed to control their destiny. But, if we assume to control their destiny, we shall, if we do not use it to humanize and Christianize those whom circumstances beyond our control have placed under our influence and care be without their august recompense. If we are overruled in our efforts to do our duty, or our services will not be received, be it so. We will stand acquitted at our great account, and on others will fall all the responsibility.
